Apostolicam Actuositatem (Apostolic Activity) is the Decree on The Apostolate of the Laity, promulgated on November 18, 1965. The decree placed the laity directly in the mission of the church (Lumen Gentium Chps 2, 4,5 and Gaudium et Spes n43). Popes John XXIII and Paul VI made church history by inviting lay people to be auditors at the council. Lay people are called to their vocation through baptism. "- the laity are made to share the priestly, prophetic and kingly office of Christ; they have---in the church and in the world their own assignment in the mission of the whole People of God" (n2). Women receive a special mention. "--women are taking an increasingly active share in the entire life of society, it is very important that their participation in the various sectors of the church's apostolate should likewise develop" (n9). One of the four major areas of the lay apostolate is like-towards-like. This term refers to the lay apostolate in their own social environment. Here they can be of help to their neighbour by bringing the Christian spirit into their various professional activities, at work, at study, at leisure or social groups. Their Christian conduct " makes itself gradually felt in the surroundings where they live and work" (n13).

The decree recommends that councils made up of clergy and laity be set up at diocesan and parish levels to " to assist the church's apostolic work either in--evangelization--sanctification--charity--social relations and the rest;---to take care of mutual coordinating of various lay associations and undertakings, the autonomy and particular nature of each remaining untouched"(n26).
