FAITH CORNER – THE LIVES OF THE SAINTS

Saint Liphardus had been a lawyer with an impeccable reputation for honesty and integrity. He had risen to one of the highest judicial posts when he decided to leave secular life, as well as all of his worldly possessions, to live the hermitic life of a holy sage. He retired to live as a hermit in the ruins of an old castle and built himself a hut amidst the ruins. He lived an extraordinarily simple, austere, and contemplative life, and consumed only foods obtained from the soil and streams-barley bread and water. Soon others came to join him and as this group grew in numbers, they formed a small community of prayerful contemplative monks. Eventually, a flourishing religious community developed at this site. Liphardus organized the building of a monastery to accommodate the large numbers of individuals seeking to learn from his ways. Through all his years of guiding others, he never wavered from living a humble contemplative life, and never held back sharing his knowledge with all who sought his wisdom. He died at the age of seventy-three and after his passing, his community built a church in the town of Meung-sur-Loire. Saint Liphardus is remembered for his simplicity, honesty, and love for all beings. His humble lifestyle and diet attest to the merciful nature of his soul. Mystics, Ascetics & Monks. By: Dr. Holly Roberts
